Who are the Unemployed.

An interesting inquiry with regard to the real character of the unemployed is now actively conducted in London. The gov- most easily taken, and the most effective enment has no part in it—a fact which remedy known to Cleanse the Syst m when actively conducted in London. The govmakes the public more confident of the soundness of the conclusions already reached. Official investigations of poverty, its causes and cure, are always open to the suspicion pany, San Francisco, Cal. E. S. Leadbeater of one sidedness. They are too apt to represent the views and wishes of the party in power. But, when the newspapers and private citizens address their energies to this difficult subject, we are pretty sure to get at the truth by averaging the results of their inquiries and opinions.

Just now the unemployed of London are undergoing a scrutiny to which, perhaps, they have never before been subjected. Correspondents, interviewers, reporters are flooding the leading journals with their con-tributions to this neglected but extremely important branch of knowledge. The spe cial occasion of the discussion is the destitution which the London poor feel most acutely in a bitter winter like the present. What Steam Flooring & Planing Mill can be done for them? is the anxious inquiry of philanthropists and students of social science.

Some theorists, and among them men of high character, not to be suspected of sympathy with communism, stoutly advocate what may be called the book theory of State support for the unemployed. This does not mean alms-giving. It looks only to the provision of work at living wages for men who cannot find it. There is much in this theory that appeals to kind human hearts. "Is it not better," we hear it often asked, "to farnish work to the idle, often asked, "to farnish work to the order. and so make them useful to the community. than to pay for their support in poorhouses and worse still, in prisons?" If those were the actual alternatives, there would be far less opposition to the scheme of making work for the unemployed. If the adoption of the former course would banish poverty and crime, few people would be found to contend against it. Even on the ground of economy alone, shrewd taxpayers would not demur to a scheme which, if it did not re-duce their burdens would at least give an increased security to their possessions. And so, on all accounts, the controversy now carried on in the London press has a genuine practical interest, not only in the British metropolis, but in every great city. New York has its share of mechanics and laboring men who belong to the melancholy ranks of the unemployed. In hard winters and during periods of business prostration, they are specially numerous. But there is no season of exceptional prosperity when they wholly disappear from our streets. Who are they and what can be done for them? Upon these puzzling questions we are now receiving some light from

It appears very clearly from the evidence thus far adduced that the unemployed workingmen of Loudon are as a rule out of occupation through faults of their own. Many of them have been discharged for in-Many of them have been discharged for in-dolence, incapacity, and most often intemperance. When the first pinch of hard times is felt by the manufacturers or employers of any kind, the weeding out process begins among the hands. It is necessary to turn away 10 or 20 or 50 per cent, of the men. The principle of natural selection and the survival of the fittest is then applied with unerring accuracy. Out go all the eye servants, the men who botch their work, who make their noonings too long, who are always a few minutes late in the morning, and who put down their tools a little before the whistle blows or the ball gives the signal at night, and who have occasional sprees, or whose faculties are always benumbed by drick, though they may not become intoxicated. The shortcomings of such workmen may be endured in busy HAVE FOR SALE

Limes. But they are the first to feel the bard hand of retrenchment. These same men might have remained in employment bad they have a mong the better instead of had they been among the better instead of the poorer class of hands. A correspondent of the London Times supplies a remarkable illustration of the qualiy of men who seek relief from the casual wards of that city. They are not thieves or otherwise dishonest persons. They always claim to be out of work and to be requiolaim to be out of work and to be requiring aid only till they find employment. Some excellent persons tried not long ago to help these unfortunates by concerted action. They picked out a hundred of them to be restored if possible to the useful walks of life. It was first necessary to inquire into their habits—whether they were tangents or intermporate industrious or in. temperate or intemperate, industrious or indolent, on the whole good or poor material. Only four out of the hundred passed the ordeal satisfactorily. Three out of this four resisted a minute investigation of their previous history. The fourth man alone was set to work and proved a failure. The result of this thorough and impartial experiment is not encouraging to those who urge that the State should provide work for the unemployed.

That which cannot be done by private en-J. H. SCARFF, M.D., work compulsory for sturdy beggars and vagrants by seizing and confining them and compelling them to earn their bread; but it is quite another thing to give remunerative employment to men who cannot yet be nominally enrolled among these classes. If the unemployed responded at all, they would do so of their own free will; and we may be sure that a large proportion would not venture upon the hard work that would be expected of them in any rational State system that might be affected. And, the unemployed responded at all, they Taise sizes—$1, 50 and 25c sizes; the finest be expected of them in any rational State be expected of them in any rational State be expected of them in any rational state by T. F. Experiment & co.

at the best, the inevitable effect would be to attract to the scene of the exper-iment the unemployed from all the sur-rounding country. The supply of men out of work would far exceed the provisions for their relief. In consequence the evils which it was sought to avert would be only aggra-vated by such injudicious efforts to do good. And meanwhile the expenses of the undertaking would press heavily, not only upon the taxpayers, but upon the industrious persons who take good care not to become unemployed even in the hardest times. History proves that such are the effects of all attempts to make work at the expense of the State for the passing relief of individuals who might in most cases find work for themselves if they would only take what offered and do it to the best of their ability. Every State, that may truly be called civilized, takes generous care of the poor, the sick, the helpless among its inhabitants. Private benevolence supplements public charity. Such kindness cannot be too far extended in case of need. It is a policy much more economical and truly beneficial than one which provides work which is unnecessary at fancy prices for the kind of men who recruit the standing army of the unemployed. The former is practical philanthro-phy. The latter is socialism exemplified in one of its most insidious forms .- N. Y. Jour. nal of Commerce.
